

PARISER PLATZ BERLIN 2001 - Pariser Platz creates an urban ensemble in conjunction with the Brandenburg Gate, which will once again become the entrance to the city, as it was before World War II. The building is the only bourgeois city palace on the square, with restaurants and shops along the street and offices and living space on the upper floors.

